

No. Once you or other interested parties leave the property or the area, there may be no one with sufficient interest in the property to enforce the restrictions you have placed on the land. With a conservation easement, you can be assured that the easement holding organization has (1) a long term interest in enforcing and (2) a duty to enforce the terms of the document.